Located in Halles de l'Île, originally built in 1849 as Geneva's municipal slaughterhouse, the Halles de l'Île has witnessed cycles of transformation, from market hall to abandonment, from cultural initiatives to neglect and threat. Odys reclaims this layered history through a minimal, sensitive intervention that bridges the past and present while reviving the island's spirit.

Guided by conservation principles, Odys retains the building's industrial honesty and spatial rhythm, allowing traces of time to remain visible. Rather than impose a new identity, Odys reawakens the old one, drawing inspiration from the idea of phantom limbs, where the memory of what once existed continues to pulse beneath the surface.

Through light, material, and atmosphere, the Halles once again becomes a space of connection, a bar that gathers people, sound, and stories. Odys transforms a forgotten void into a living presence, turning the island into a vibrant urban heartbeat once more.

A Welcoming Glow

As you stroll along Rue Quai de la Poste, your attention is drawn to a spectrum of light reflecting on the surface of the Rhône River, beckoning you closer.

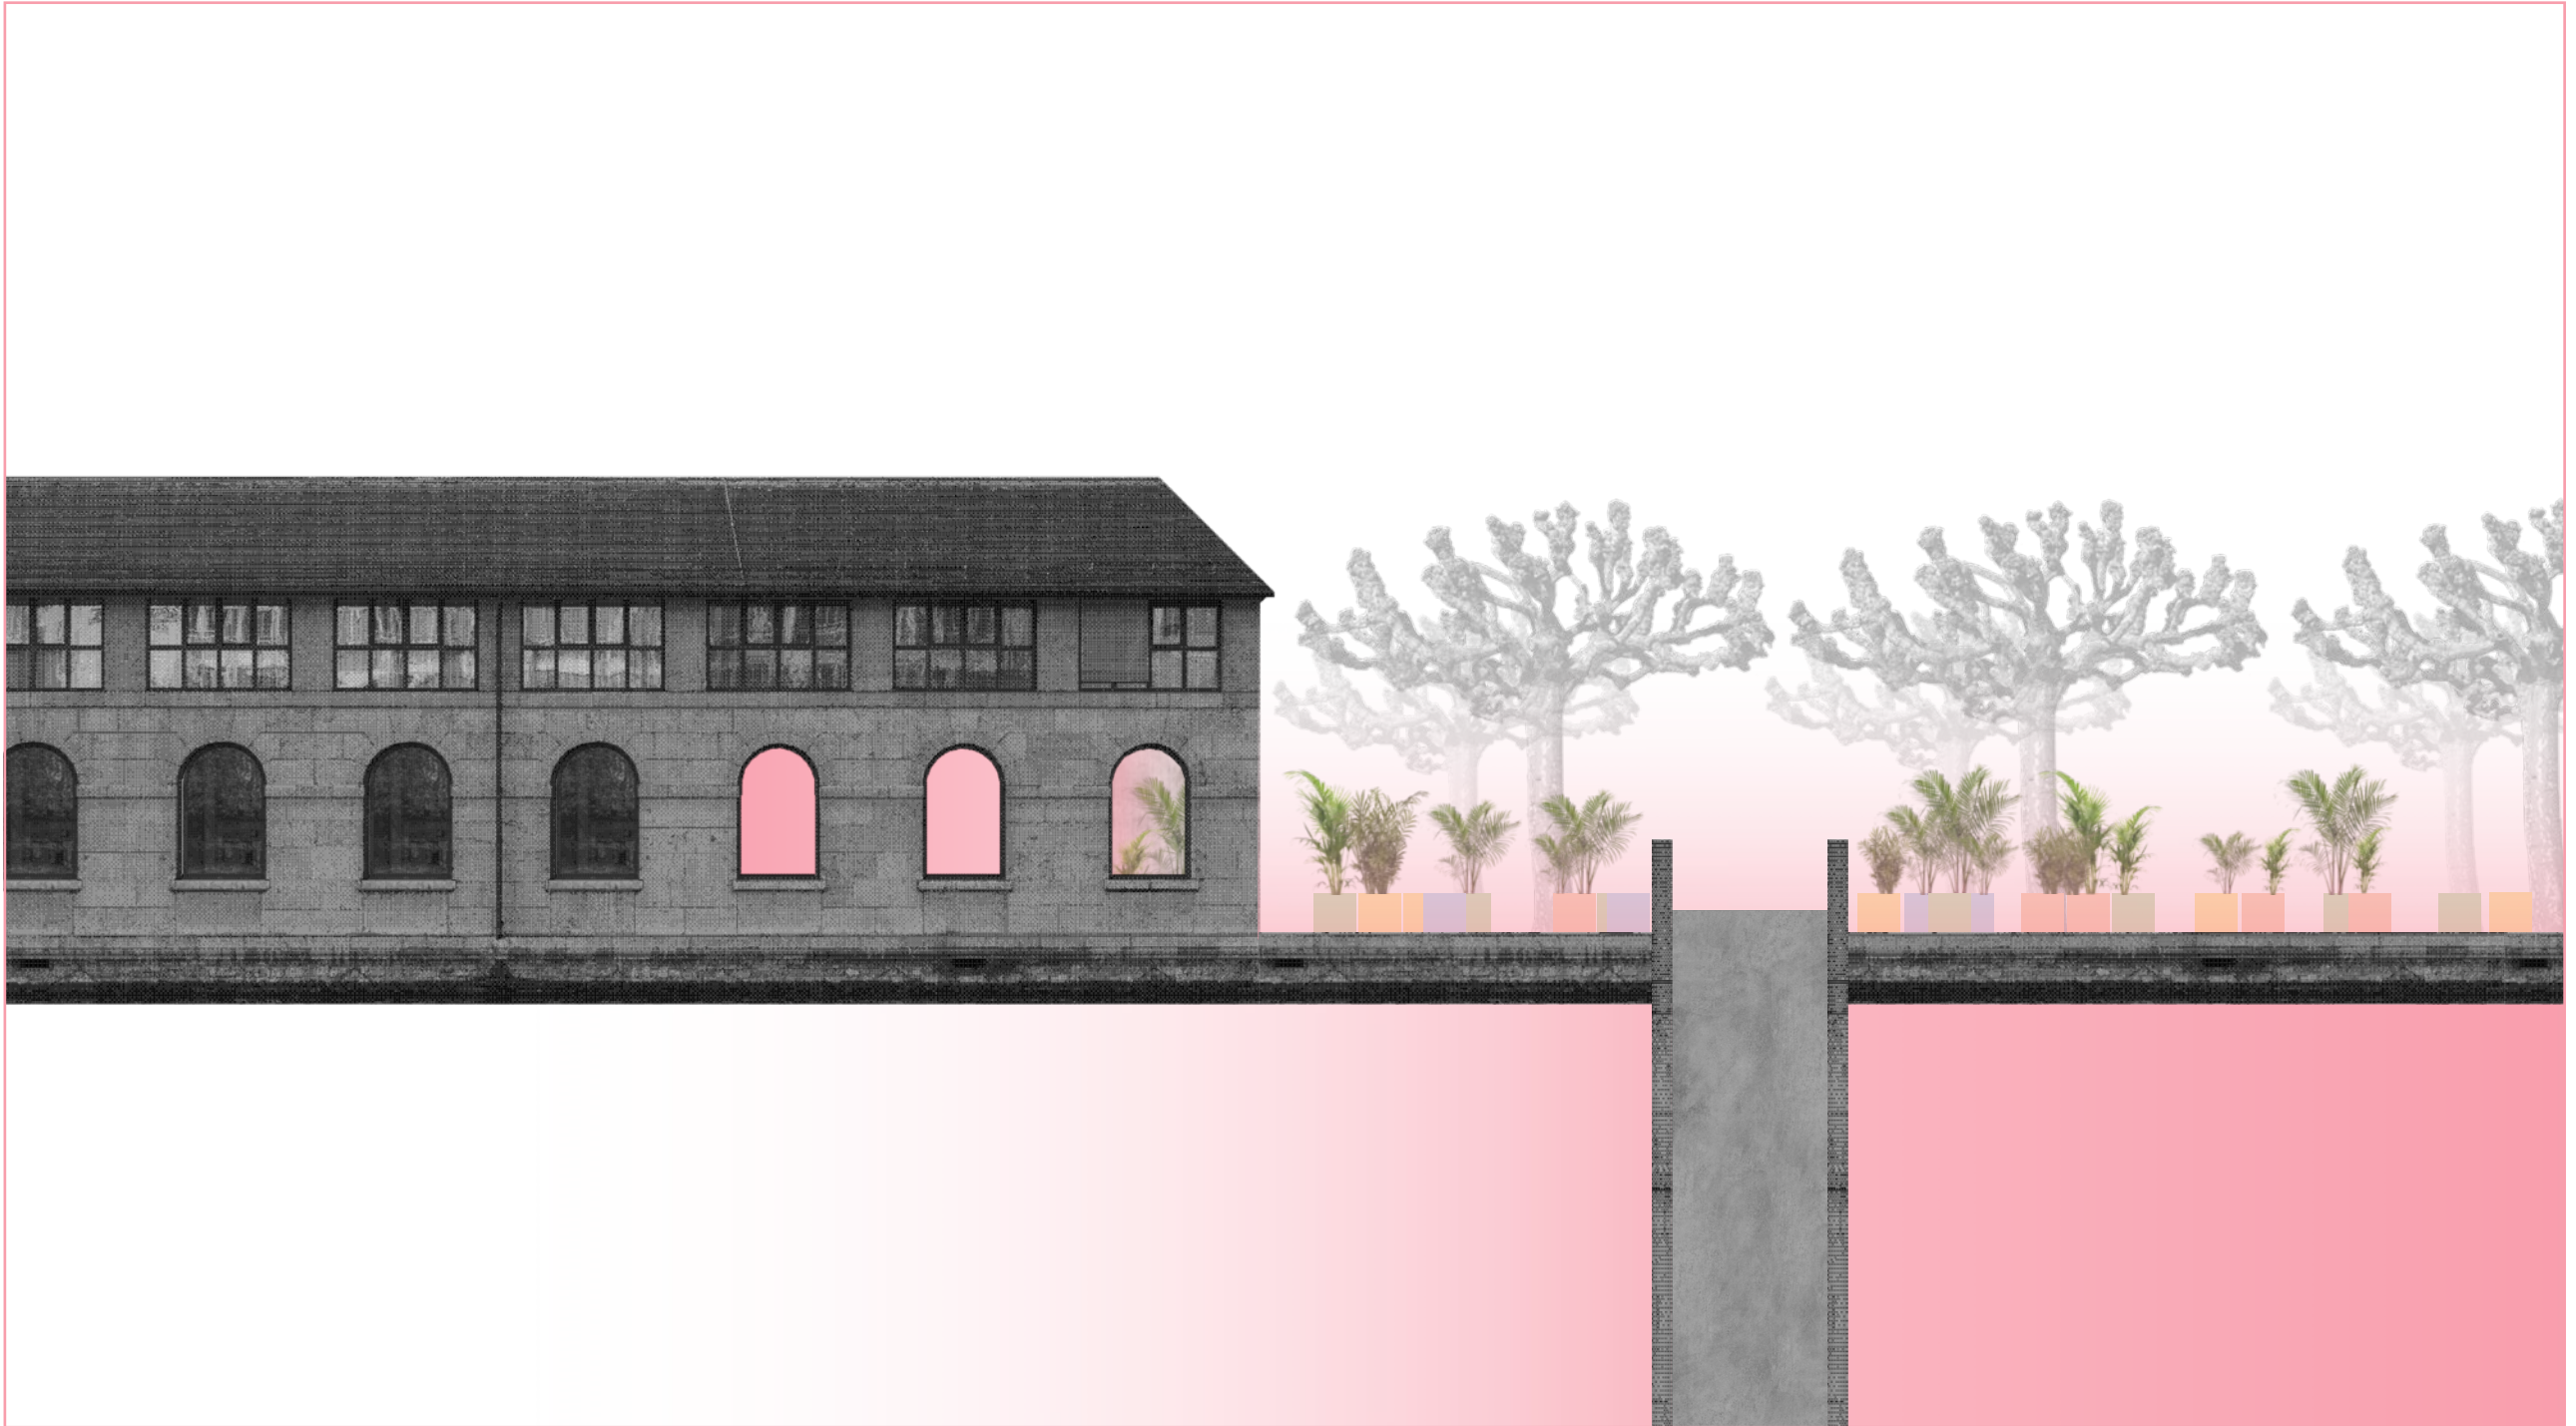

The Transmission

Through the three arches a projection of an unconventional themed experience is presented.

The Cross Over

As you step onto the in-between, the light from the island beckons. It grows more intense, wrapping around you like a warm embrace.

Bridging Realms

Approaching the island, you experience a seamless transition where the vibrant energy of the outdoors merges with the intimate ambiance within.

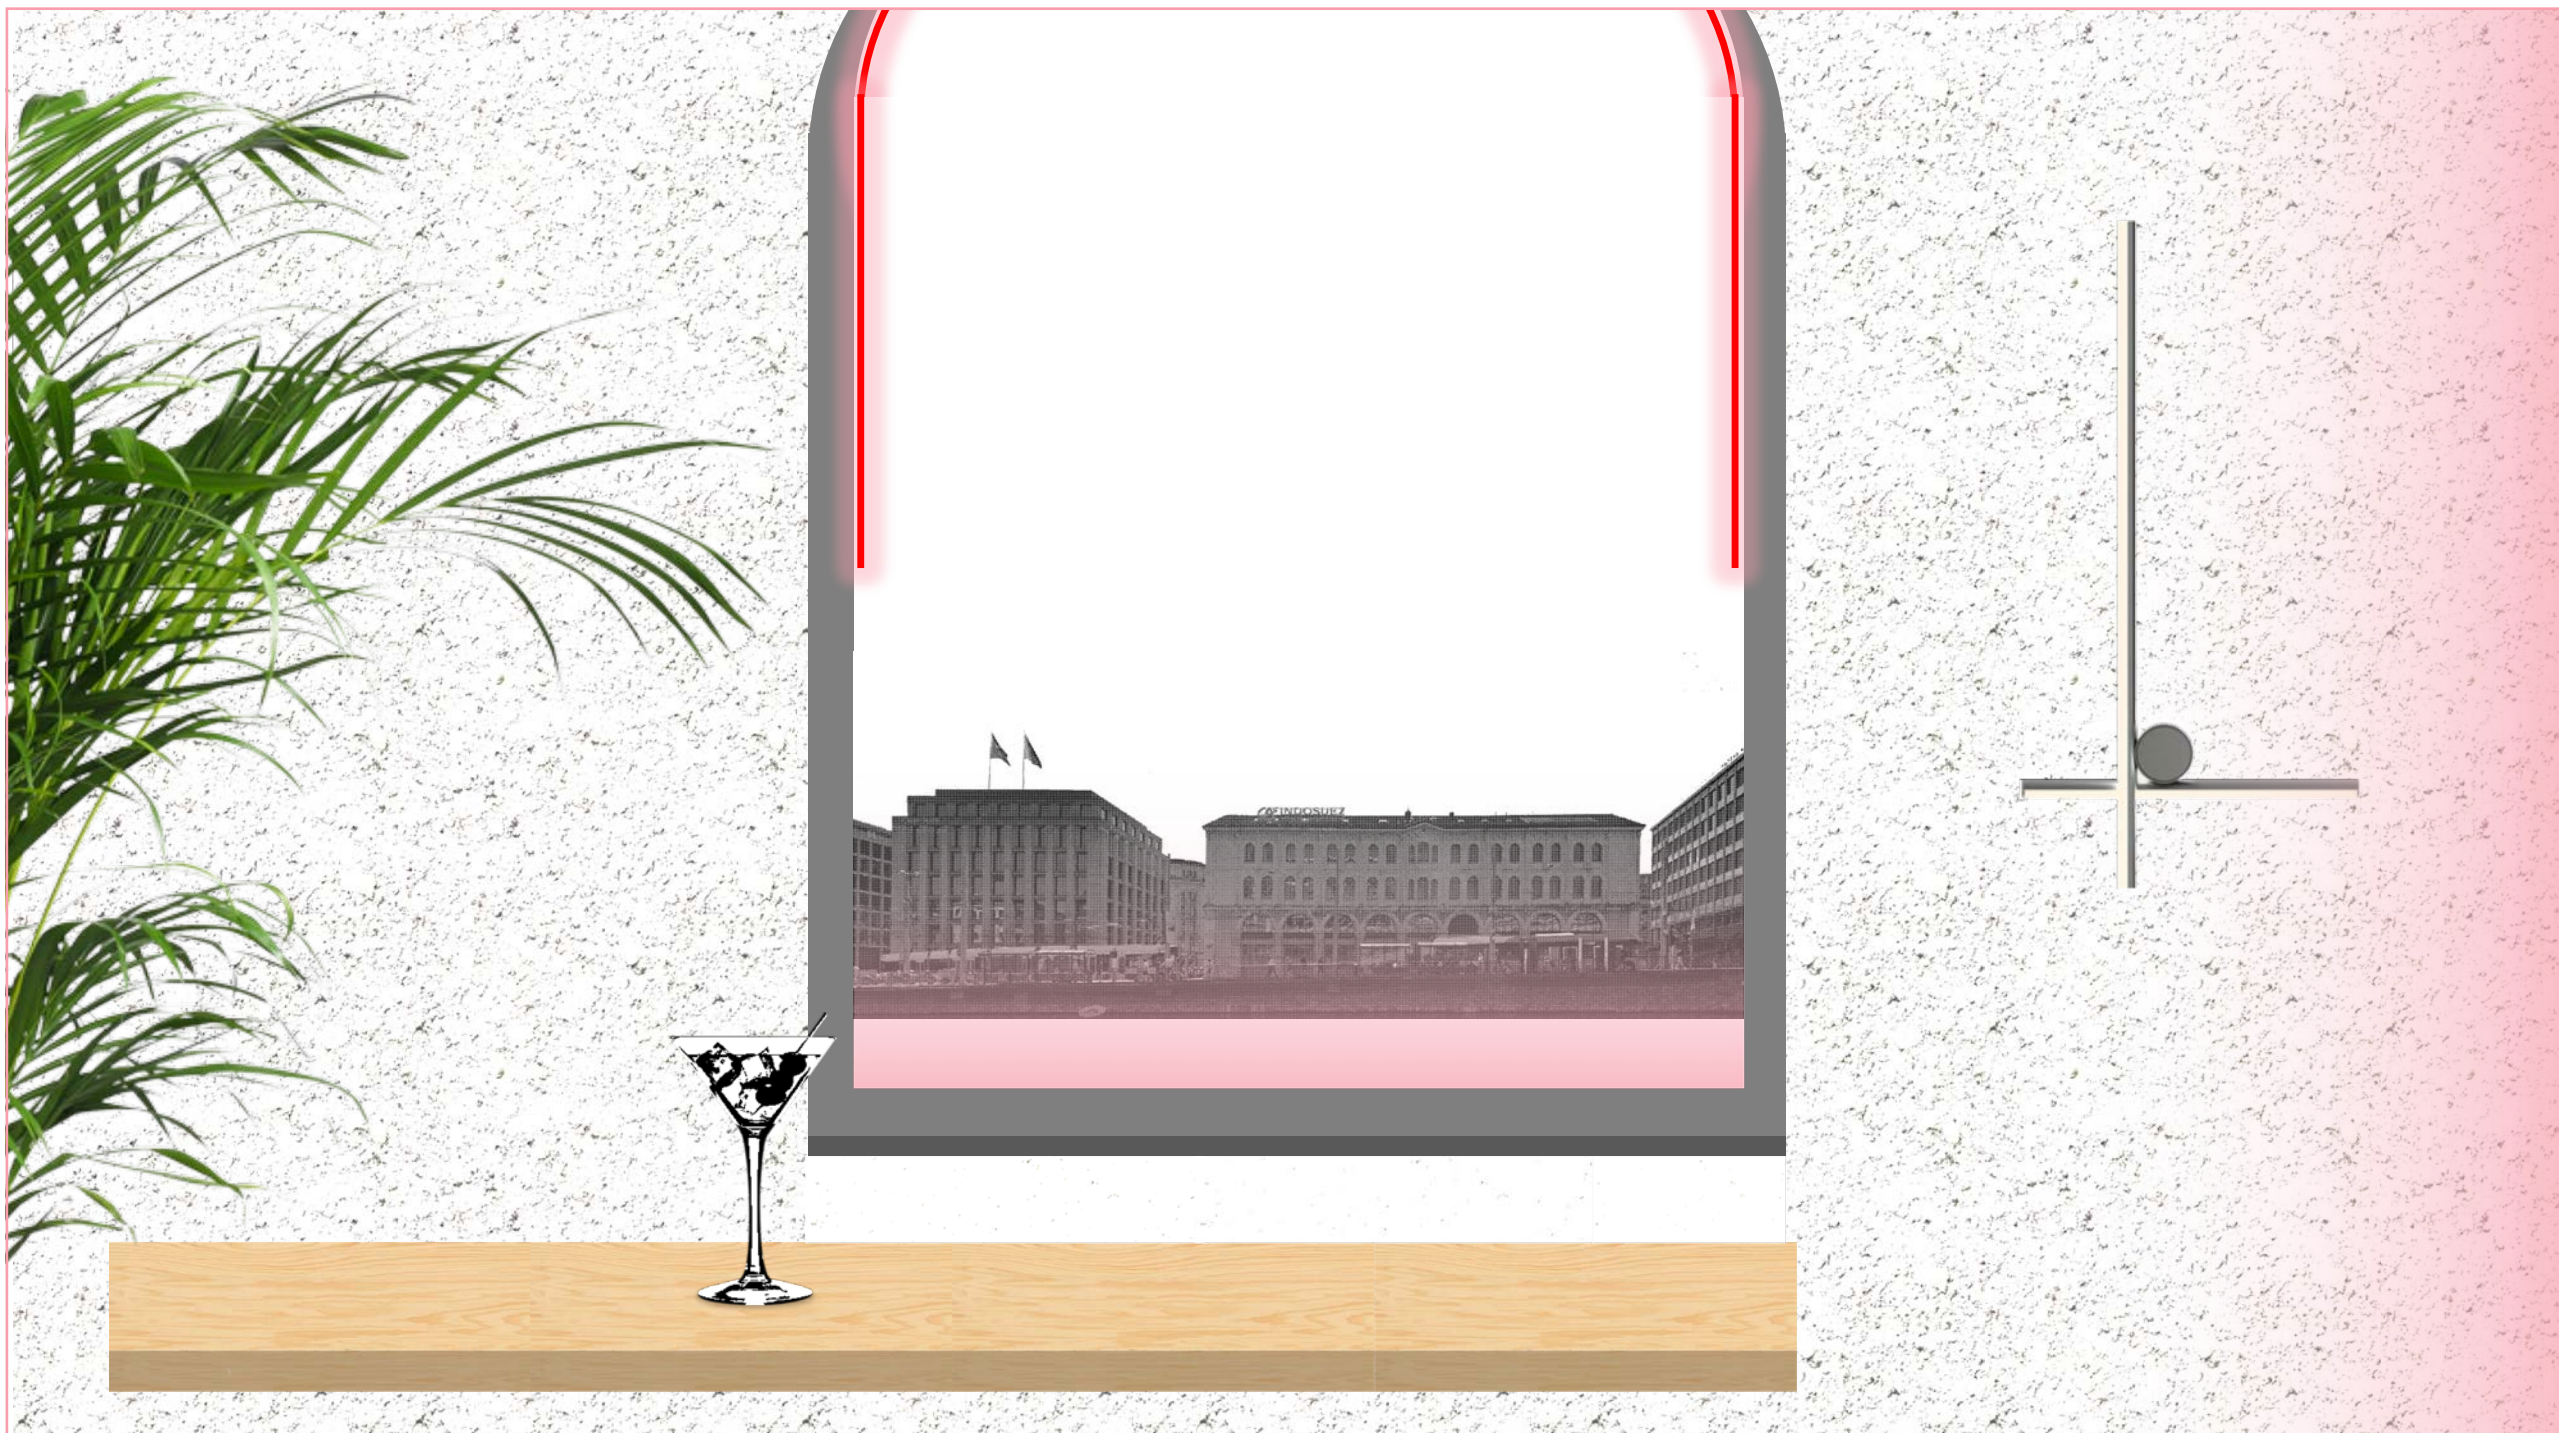

Casual Connections

Picture a casual space that immerses in the natural surroundings, where the happy vibes blend with the gentle rustle of leaves.

A Sculptural Heart

Inside, a central sculpted mass rises gracefully, while extending the experience of nature into the bar. This mass radiates the island's vibes, inviting exploration and interaction.

A New Perspective

The design unites the historical essence of the area with contemporary influences, offering a fresh perception of the city.

I didn't text you,
my vodka Redbull did.

The Vibe

Welcome to the Boiler Room: The heartbeat of the city, a transformed kitchen, where energy flows and festive vibes ignite. This is the space that fuels our celebrations and brings life to every gathering!
